Educational public performance rights are included in the Institutional Price of all films sold on this website. Educational public performance rights means any non-commercial exhibition to a group for educational purposes. Showings where an admission fee is charged are not permitted under this license agreement and would require a special license and, often, a licensing fee.

Permitted screenings include face-to-face teaching in a setting where such teaching normally takes place. They also include library carrels and the like, so that a professor can put a video "on reserve" in the library for student viewing after class. Screenings taking place in a theater, auditorium, or any public place outside of classrooms for commercial use are not permitted with this license. To inquire about purchasing a license for a commercial public screening of the film, contact Redhouse Productions at theparkinglotmovie@gmail.com.

All DVDs sold by us are protected by international copyright law. No DVD may be duplicated, altered, broadcast, electronically transmitted, digitized, edited, or shown where an admission fee is charged without our prior written permission. Violation of copyright law is a federal crime; it is also unethical.
